Landscape of American Christianity

*Six trends of American Contemporary Christianity:
Are you one of these?*

Hitchhiker Christian

The hitchhiker says, “You go to meetings and serve on boards and committees, grapple with the issues, do the work of the church and pay the bills...I’ll come along for the ride. But, if things do not suit me, I’ll criticize and complain and probably bail out. My thumb is always out for a better ride.”

Consumer Mentality

Church “shoppers” attend one church for preaching, send their children to another church for its youth program and go to a third church for its small group. Their motto is “What’s in it for me?” This is the ultimate consumerism: no praying, no sacrifice, no involvement.

Spectator Christianity

Spectator christianity feeds on the delusion that virtue can come through viewing, much like a football fan who imagines that he ingests strength and daring while watching his favorite football team. What we have are church fans who cheer the saints on while being in desperate need of meaning and engagement.

Drive-Through Christians

These Christians get their “church fix” out of the way by attending a weeknight service or an early service on Sunday morning so they can save the bulk of their Sunday for that all-important sporting event or family recreational activity.

Relationless Christianity

Relationless Christianity can become the “in thing.” The best church is the one that knows you least and demands the least. No relationship, no accountability, no responsibility, no spiritual growth.

Churchless Worshipper

The current myth is that a life of worship is possible, even better, apart from the church. Some express it like this: “For church, I go to my favorite coffee shop at the mall and spend the morning with the Lord. That’s how I worship.”

The loss of commitment to church is undermining the fabric of society, of the family and of our churches. Many Christians are content to spend Sundays like the unsaved world. Sporting events, family activities, shopping, working, and TV are robbing individuals and families of spiritual convictions, growth and vitality.

A worldly church will not reach the world for Christ.
